Subject: Selection – FAA Administrator

Dear Mr. President:

I am spokesperson for the ‘A’ Group, an ad hoc, international collection of disabled airline crewmembers and their health and safety advocates led by Captain John Hoyte, Founder and CEO of Aerotoxic Association, UK. The FAA has suffered for decades without a qualified and effective leader. Inquiring at FAA offices, I’ve discovered no definable process governing the administrator selection process.

The FAA’s mandate (in its own words), “We’re responsible for the safety of civil aviation”, has become clouded in principle by emphasis supporting the business interests of commercial air transportation. This has occurred at an illness and disability cost to unsuspecting passengers, pilots, and most especially, the long suffering, hard working airline flight attendant.

Simply, the new administrator must recognize this deregulation-inspired, five decades old hazard in addition to the many responsibilities of the administration.

Thank you, Mr. President, and Godspeed,

John M. Lind CPCU ARM, retired
